THE OFFERINGS AT THE LYCEUM THEATRE AS SEEN BY THE VA- RIOUS CRITICS OF THE TRADE JOURNALS AND "WIDS."

The work of Charles Neville Buck needs no introduction. "The Call of the Cumberlands" is the second of his books to be successfully picturized. Although this is the best work that Dustin Farnum has yet done for the camera, all of the types are not virile, but well contrasted, present a characterization of strength. You can't fail to be pleased with the Sampson South of Dustin Farnum, or the Spicer South of Herbert Standing, while the Tamarack Spider of Dick Le Strange is as despicable character as you would wish to see.

In spite of the fact that the production is not a perfect one, there are scenes in it that could scarcely be excelled of their kind. For instance, the night when with brooding blood the Hollmans trail the slayer of their kinsman with blood hounds. Or the scene at the Country Club near New York where Sampson South passes a blow for the first time, and with blood streaming from a wounded lip pulls a gun on the men whom his keen perception singles out as the chief movers in a plot to bring about the murder of a political adversary with him as the murderer. The production is one that will be thoroughly enjoyed as a truthful portrayal of a family feud in the Kentucky mountains. It will be presented at the Lyceum Theatre, Monday, January 29th.

"His Picture in the Papers" is a delightful comedy, nicely balanced, and it would be hard to find an actor who could successfully carry the leading role as does Douglas Fairbanks. His personality is so all prevailing that he is like the sun when it rises in the sky of morning stars, the light by which some of them glow, the light which causes all of them to fade. He is apparently in a class by himself, at once an athlete of resource and daring, and a subtle interpreter of the spunky and amusing side of human nature as revealed in everyday experience by a plain, ordinary man attempting to be a God.

The play not only affords him just the sort of opportunity that suits his qualification, but it is highly ingenious, cleverly constructed and a work of art in itself. It has an abundance of merit, especially in characterization, outside the variety of chances it throws in the way of Fairbanks. The story is a corking good one, the subtitles are bright, well handled and finely interpreted. What more can one ask for?

Our personal opinion is: "From reports of all the film critics and the various people who have seen the work of Fairbanks, you will be highly pleased with this or any of his productions if you are fond of good, clean fast comedy." Recently the Kansas City Star said that Fairbanks had been offered $750,000 for a year's contract. Where there is as much smoke, there is bound to be some fire. We urge that you come and see "His Picture in the Papers" which will be shown Tuesday, January 30th.

"Playing With Fire" is the title of a rather frank, though unobjectionable society problem starring Madame Olga Petrova. Although there is nothing particular edifying about this drama, the backgrounds for the subtitles, designed to harmonize with the action being portrayed, odd lighting effects, the use of double exposure and artistic workmanship is certain to make this a well liked production.

Always distinguished in appearance and wearing many stylish gowns, Madame Petrova is an impressive, and to a certain extent, sympathetic figure in the role of a woman who marries an elderly gentleman out of gratitude, to be later carried away by the impetuous wooing of an unprincipled young artist. When it comes to protecting her step-daughter from the man who wronged

The Call of the Cumberlands

From the popular novel by Charles Neville Buck.

The gripping story of a Kentucky feud with a noted screen star in a role of commanding prominence.

You will remember Farnum from his part in "The Gentleman from Indiana." You will like this story equally as well.

her, she has no difficulty in making you believe she is really sincere in her purpose. The climax of the story is cleverly worked up, the plot construction is adroit from first to last, and is free from illogical turns. As a whole, it is a good production and is sure to please anyone that is fond of drama or stories of the society problem nature. It will be shown at the Lyceum Thursday, February 1st.
